CALL FOR PAPERS

The Yale School of Management is now accepting submissions to the Yale Doctoral Fall Finance Conference to be held on Friday, November 9, 2018 in New Haven, CT. Graduate students may submit papers in all fields of financial economics, so long as the primary focus of the paper is not on a topic in behavioral finance or behavioral economics (we encourage submissions in these fields to the Yale Whitebox Advisors conference held in the spring).

Applicants must be enrolled in a graduate program. Complete papers are preferred, but extended abstracts of 750-1000 words will also be considered; research proposals will not be accepted. Submissions must be received by Friday, September 21st. Please submit your abstracts or papers to doctoralfallfinance@yale.edu. The program will attempt to balance a mix of papers across subject areas and fields.

The goal of the conference is to provide feedback for and promote interaction among, graduate student researchers in the various fields of finance, in a collegial and relatively informal environment. Along with the graduate students, Yale faculty are also invited to attend the talks.

Please note that for graduate student presenters, hotel accommodations for the night of Thursday, November 8th and a travel stipend will be provided (details to come). Hotel accommodations will be covered for a limited number of other, non-presenting graduate student participants in the conference. In this case, please register for the conference first and then email doctoralfallfinance@yale.edu indicating that you would like a hotel room and we will let you know if we still have availability.

For questions and further information please contact: doctoralfallfinance@yale.edu or visit the conference website.

Submission Deadline: Friday, September 21st

Acceptance and rejection emails will be sent out no later than Friday, October 5th.
